

THE WASHINGTON POSTDave McIntyre* Exceptional
SOLLUNA PRIORAT

Priorat is known for heady, high-alcohol reds from garnacha (grenache), grown on slate soils called "llicorella" in hills near the Mediterranean coast in northeastern Spain. This intriguing example offers attractive perfume of roasted fruits and wild herbs, and a sense of adventure. ABV: 14.5 percent.

THE WASHINGTON POST*Dave McIntyre* Exceptional
SOLLUNA PRIORAT

Priorat is known for heady, high-alcohol reds from garnacha (grenache), grown on slate soils called "llicorella" in hills near the Mediterranean coast in northeastern Spain. This intriguing example offers attractive perfume of roasted fruits and wild herbs, and a sense of adventure. ABV: 14.5 percent.

THE WASHINGTON POST*Dave McIntyre* Exceptional
SOLLUNA PRIORAT

Priorat is known for heady, high-alcohol reds from garnacha (grenache), grown on slate soils called "llicorella" in hills near the Mediterranean coast in northeastern Spain. This intriguing example offers attractive perfume of roasted fruits and wild herbs, and a sense of adventure. ABV: 14.5 percent.

THE WASHINGTON POST*Dave McIntyre* Exceptional
SOLLUNA PRIORAT

Priorat is known for heady, high-alcohol reds from garnacha (grenache), grown on slate soils called "llicorella" in hills near the Mediterranean coast in northeastern Spain. This intriguing example offers attractive perfume of roasted fruits and wild herbs, and a sense of adventure. ABV: 14.5 percent.

